MASTERS

CORSICA SEASON
THREE

CREST AUTOSPORT

As the championship arrives at the Tour de Corse, the rally continues to live up to its legendary nickname - the "Rally of 10,000 Corners."

Held on the mountainous Mediterranean island of Corsica, the rally is an unforgiving test of precision and concentration, with stage after stage of relentless twisting tarmac roads carved into cliffsides and winding through remote mountain villages.

There are scarcely any straight sections; drivers must maintain perfect rhythm through endless sequences of bends where a small mistake can send a car into stone walls or steep drops.

Tyre management, braking precision, and smooth driving are crucial on the abrasive Corsican asphalt, particularly on the rally's famously long stages that can stretch beyond 40 kilometres without pause.

Between 1987 and 1993, the event has been dominated by masters of tarmac driving who thrive on technical complexity and unwavering focus. As the season unfolds, the Tour de Corse remains the ultimate proving ground for rally drivers who claim to have the finest car control and concentration in the world.
